Teresa Glenn Petrick named PGAA Alumna of Distinction

The Pitt-Greensburg Alumni Association (PGAA) named Teresa "Terri" Glenn Petrick '79 the 2014 PGAA Alumna of Distinction. The award, which was presented during the alumni reception and dinner as part of Blue & Gold Weekend: Homecoming 2014, acknowledges excellence among Pitt-Greensburg alumni.

Senior vice president for AAA East Central (Pittsburgh, PA), Petrick is responsible for member service and operational performance of the not-for-profit automobile club operating in 81 sites in five states. She leads corporate functions, including human resources, information technology, and facilities, and she serves as chief integration officer leading the merger activities of AAA East Central into Auto Club Enterprises of Southern California.

Petrick graduated from Pitt-Greensburg as a University Scholar and magna cum laude with a bachelor's of science degree in Business Administration. She completed her high school education at McKeesport Senior High School a year early and started college when she was 16 years old.

"Alumni are the ultimate 'product' of a college or university," said Sharon P. Smith, PhD, president of the University of Pittsburgh at Greensburg. "Academic institutions, like other organizations, have 'brands' that make them distinctive and their alumni are characterized by that brand. Terri exemplifies the Pitt-Greensburg alumni brand. Her success is a combination of her own drive and expertise combined with the education and mentoring that she received through Pitt-Greensburg. When I see Terri, I know that she personifies all the best that Pitt-Greensburg offers its students."

In her acceptance speech for the PGAA award, Petrick noted that the average person makes over a million choices in his or her lifetime, saying, "Most choices are insignificant, mundane, or even made in a relatively passive way . . . but a few, very few, are life defining. . . . I once read that the hardest choices in life aren't between what's right and what's wrong, but between what's right and what's best. Without a doubt and unequivocally, Pitt-Greensburg was what was best for me."

She closed her speech with this observation: "I got that first class education, I found a mentor in Dr. Guy Rossetti who was a Spanish professor who helped me carve a pathway to graduate school and ultimately my career in health care. I made some lifelong friends . . . And I ultimately learned that even though we all make millions of choices over the course of time, in the end our choices make us. I am grateful that I chose Pitt-Greensburg and that choice made me."

After completing her degree at Pitt-Greensburg, Petrick went on to earn a master's degree in public management with a concentration in Health Care Management from Carnegie Mellon University's School of Urban & Public Affairs. She graduated with highest distinction from the program.

Petrick is a high impact business leader with 30 years of successful and diverse management experience who has demonstrated achievement in enhancing performance, profitability, and service growth. Her expertise lies in leading change, especially in the areas of planning, operations, outcomes management, leadership development, and system integration. Recognized as an inspirational leader, a collaborative team player, and a consistent top performer, she is skilled at communication, innovative thinking, leveraging corporate culture, and developing employees.

Pitt
Greensburg

Message from the President

Congratulations to Terri Petrick '79 who was named the PGAA Alumna of Distinction. She exemplifies the Pitt-Greensburg brand like so many of our alumni do. The mentoring and education our graduates receive during their time here forms a foundation for the success they realize through their own expertise and drive.

It is easy for alumni to become involved—and stay involved—at Pitt-Greensburg. The Pitt-Greensburg Alumni Association (PGAA) is active and growing. Nominations are currently being accepted for the PGAA Board of Directors. Serving on the PGAA Board allows you to share your ideas and is just one way you can make a difference here. Other ways are to join us for Pitt Day in Harrisburg on March 4, and to watch for details about National Pitt Networking Day.

Be sure to plan to attend our many events planned for this spring semester. Whether it is an internationally recognized speaker or our own theater and music groups—there are plenty of opportunities to return to campus for quality programs that are free or reasonably priced.

Our Center For Applied Research (CFAR) marked its first anniversary last semester. The work they do continues to be impressive and, it is the interdisciplinary approach that it incorporates that makes it unique. Faculty from a variety of disciplines are working side by side with students who are gaining hands-on experience and being paid for their efforts. Their work benefits Pitt-Greensburg and the greater Greensburg community.

On a more serious note, we marked the passing of several members of our campus community: William Roach, Robert Davis, and Nancy Flórez-Estrada. Roach and Davis were emeritus Advisory Board members who died in December 2014 and Dr. Flórez-Estrada, emeritus associate professor of Spanish, died in January. Each one, in their own way, used their individual skills and talents to contribute to the growth and success of Pitt-Greensburg. Please watch for their obituaries when they are published in the summer magazine issue of Blue & Gold.

Aaron Slafka '08 also left his mark on our campus. Inspirational by his example, Aaron will be remembered for never giving up and for encouraging those around him to move past their limitations. Desiring to keep his memory alive and to help others, his friends approached Pitt-Greensburg about establishing a scholarship in Aaron's name. We couldn't think of a better way to commemorate his example and his contributions to our campus.

Hail to Pitt!

Jakiela wins 2015 City of Asylum/Pittsburgh Prize

Lori Jakiela, poet, memoirist, and associate professor of English, is the recipient of the 2015 City of Asylum/Pittsburgh Prize.

Jakiela was chosen from a pool of writer-applicants, residents of Western Pennsylvania aged 30 and over, who have published at least one full-length book of poetry, fiction, or non-fiction. The 2015 City of Asylum/Pittsburgh prize consists of a month-long, all-expenses-paid writing residency in Brussels, Belgium. Applications were judged by Chuck Kinder, author of "Snakehunters and Honeymooners: A Cautionary Tale."

"While I found many pleasures in quite a few of the entries, I kept returning with delight and excitement to the writing sample in Lori Jakiela's application," said Kinder.

The Prize is part of City of Asylum's Bridges initiative, which will create a number of international writer residencies for Western Pennsylvania writers. This residency is a collaboration with the Belgian literary organization, Het beschrijf, and is hosted at the Passa Porta literary center in Brussels.

Music at Pitt-Greensburg plans April concerts

Music at Pitt-Greensburg will close the spring semester with a focus on local talent and groups. The performances are free and open to the public. They begin at 7:30 p.m. in the Mary Lou Campana Chapel and Lecture Center.

The Pitt-Greensburg Chorale and Chamber Singers will offer two performances of their spring concert on April 9 and April 10. Entitled "Pop Stars, Rachstars," the concert will present a selection of popular music past and present. Featured will be opera choruses from Pagliacci, Nabucco, Il Trovatore, Der Freischütz and others, as well as Rachmaninoff's Bogorditse Devo and contemporary hits featuring the music of Lady Gaga and Meghan Trainor.

Students participating in Pitt-Greensburg's Voice and Piano Study will perform in a recital on April 15. The students are under the direction of Zach Rohlwing, instructor and accompanist. The Voice and Piano Study allows students to start or continue their vocal or piano studies through intensive,

"Jakiela's dedication to her craft means that she will be able to use her residency in Belgium to her artistic advantage, but I also feel that she reflects well on the literary community of our city and represents the values of City of Asylum in a special way," said Henry Reese, co-founder and president of City of Asylum.

Jakiela is the author of two memoirs and a poetry collection. Her third memoir—Belief Is Its Own Kind of Truth, Maybe—is forthcoming from Atticus Books in 2015.

A prolific writer, her work has been published in The New York Times, The Washington Post, The Chicago Tribune, The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, and Pittsburgh Quarterly, among others, and has been widely anthologized in textbooks. A multiple Pushcart Prize nominee, she is the recipient of a Golden Quill award for column writing from the PA Newspaper Association and won the first-ever Literary Death Match/Pittsburgh.

The recipient of the Pitt-Greensburg Alumni Association's Outstanding Faculty Award, she also teaches in the graduate writing program at Chatham University and co-directs the summer writing festival at Chautauqua Institution. ▲ one-on-one, individualized lessons as well as in studio classes. The class strives to turn musically inclined students into competent and able musicians who possess the ability and confidence to be active artists in their community.

The Joan Chambers Concert Series will present the University of Pittsburgh's popular Heinz Chapel Choir on April 18. This is the group's first concert season under the direction of new conductor, Susan Rice.

Alumni Spotlight:

Ronna Colland '87 comes full circle

What started out as a desire to stay close to home while studying accounting has come full circle for Ronna (Sarsfield) Colland '87.

A work-study student in the Business Office at the University of Pittsburgh at Greensburg, Colland completed a BS in management, then returned to campus 10 years later as its director of Business Affairs. She recalls declaring in her interview that it was her "dream job" and, upon being hired, said it was like "coming home."

A commuter student, Colland was active with the Student Government Association (SGA). She made many friends, including other work-study students as well as business management and accounting students in her study groups. Colland notes that she enjoyed all her classes but remembers Associate Professor Bob Pratt's involvement with students, including the business honor society, and Jim DeFloria, PhD, an assistant professor, for his willingness to explain and guide students in their accounting study.

Colland also reminisces about the honor she felt to be invited to Pitt's 200th anniversary celebration at the Greensburg Country Club in 1987 because of her involvement as a student. But her favorite memory: the beach party in the McKenna Hall Student Union.

"It was the middle of winter . . . they cleared out the furniture, SGA put sand in McKenna Hall, and we had a beach party. That was a lot of fun!" Colland adds, "I'm not sure how they got that past administration."

Bruisers Quest 2015: Roaming for Alumni

A solitary yet adaptable creature, Bruiser the Bobcat is on a quest in 2015 to reach the home ranges of all Pitt-Greensburg alumni.

Bruiser is roaming cyberspace to unite with alumni in their natural habitat. Download Bruiser's image at <http://bit.ly/Bruiser-BQ15> and include him in a photo with you in your territory or while on the prowl. Post the picture to the PGAA Facebook page at Facebook.com/PittGreensburgAlumni, or submit via the online form at <http://bit.ly/BruiserPhotoSubmission>.

Don't delay—Bruiser has a lot of ground to cover. Pitt-Greensburg graduates are in each of the 50 states, plus US territories, and various countries. Alumni submitting photos with Bruiser through March 31 will be entered into a drawing for a basketball autographed by Pitt Coaches Jamie Dixon and Suzie McConnell-Serio. ▲

Remember to use #BQ15

Colland, who took a couple of summer classes at the Oakland campus, finished her degree requirements a semester early at Pitt-Greensburg. Graduating in 1987, she just missed receiving her degree from Pitt-Greensburg, which received approval to confer degrees in 1988.

A certified public accountant, Colland believes her accounting courses at Pitt-Greensburg gave her a strong foundation on which to take the CPA exam, and her work-study experience provided great skills and practical training.

Like other Pitt-Greensburg students, Colland gave up her work-study job to pursue a full-time position at a law firm her senior year. "That's why I give to the Staff Association's Resource Fund," she explains. "It's directed toward helping students meet their educational expenses."

Colland credits the people in the Business Office with whom she worked as a student as having an impact on her. "Faculty and staff sincerely care about the students and want them to succeed. That is, foremost, Pitt-Greensburg."

For their part, Colland and her staff work to help students understand their bills and what they need to do to cover their tuition. "We try to steer them in the right direction, because we want them to succeed and continue in their studies."

Outside of work, Colland keeps busy with her husband, her daughter—whom she hopes will someday be a Pitt alum—and volunteer work.

"I would like alumni to come back and visit," she says. "Pitt-Greensburg is a dynamic place. It's a special place." ▲

Pitt-Greensburg earns spot on Money Magazine list

Money Magazine released a new college ranking system that used three weighted categories—educational quality, affordability, and career outcomes—to make its picks. Its ultimate goal was to identify colleges and universities that “turn out graduates with the most manageable debt.”

The University of Pittsburgh at Greensburg was one of 665 colleges out of the nation’s approximately 1,500 colleges to make the cut and one of 70 Pennsylvania colleges on the list. The University of Pittsburgh (Oakland) and Pitt-Bradford also made the list. The three categories used by Money Magazine consisted of 17 factors that analyzed, among others, the average total debt students have at graduation and the amount parents typically borrow from the federal parent PLUS loan program, along with whether alumni from each institution typically earn enough once they are in the workforce to comfortably handle their loan payments. ▲

Pitt-GreensburgTheatre Company

Chemical Imbalance: A Jekyll and Hyde Play

The Pitt-Greensburg Theatre Company will present Chemical Imbalance: A Jekyll and Hyde Play (written by Lauren Wilson) as its spring production. The performances are March 26 through March 28 at 7:30 p.m. and March 29 at 2 p.m. Tickets, available at the door, are $10 (regular) and $5 (students, seniors, Pitt ID).

A dinner and theatre option is offered for the Saturday, March 28, performance. Theatre-goers will enjoy dinner, catered by Chartwells in the Hempfield Room (Chambers Hall), and receive preferred-seating tickets for the show. Cost is $25 for both the dinner and the show. Registration is required, and may be completed by contacting Emily Stark at eas114@pitt.edu or 724-366-9896.

The play, set in the steam-driven society of Victorian England, takes a farcical look at the Robert Louis Stevenson story. Jekyll’s research finds him—as usual—investigating the split between good and evil in the human psyche. Of course, things get out of hand when he decides being evil might be more fun and recreational. Soon he realizes he needs to put a stopper on the bottle before his evil murderous side can’t be contained. The Steampunk theme is a creative element added by Stephen Schrum, PhD, associate professor of Theatre and director of the spring production.

“It is an excellent visual touchtone that works well in shows of that era,” explained Schrum, who has been involving himself in the local Steampunk community. “I’m shading it with a touch of expressionism, like those old Universal monster movies The Mummy and Dracula for that perfect Frankenstein-like marriage of styles.”

Schrum is encouraging members of the audience to join in the fun and wear Steampunk gear to the performances.

“Anyone wearing Steampunk gear to the performances will receive a 40 percent discount on the ticket price,” he explained. “Anyone wearing Steampunk gear to the Saturday (March 28) performance is invited to stay after the show to have his or her photo taken on the set by Elaine Fisher of Elaine Fisher Photography.”

Members of the cast include:

- Jordan Fessler (EUPHRONIA JEKYLL, society matron)
- Kaitlyn Schmidt (AMBROSIA JEKYLL, her daughter)
- Cletus McConville (HENRY JEKYLL, her son)
- Lauren McGuigan (LADY THROCKMORTONSHIRE, a grand dame)
- Sam McGuigan (CALLIOPE and PENELOPE THROCKMORTONSHIRE, her twin daughters, aged 9)
- Stephanie Jenkins (ROSAMUNDA DEWTHISTLE, an eligible young lady)
- Alex Knapp (XAVIER UTTERSON, cousin to Jekyll)
- Samantha Wilczynski (IVY, a maid)
- Sabrina Miron (PLODGETT, a cook)

Give A Thread Campaign

Pitt-Greensburg collects 8,300+ pieces of clothing

The University of Pittsburgh at Greensburg collected more than 8,300 pieces of clothing as its contribution to the University of Pittsburgh’s Give a Thread Campaign. Students and Office of Student Services staff loaded two vans with the bags containing the donated clothing that were then delivered to Oakland.

The campaign kicked off in late November 2014 with the collection period running through the end of January. The announcement of the total pieces of clothing collected is expected to be made at the end of February—and official notification of whether the University of Pittsburgh set a Guinness World Record for most clothing collected for the intent of donation or recycling. Pitt’s overall goal is 150,000 pieces of clothing.

Pitt-Greensburg was one of four regional campuses in the Pitt system participating in the clothing drive. It expresses a hearty thank you to the campus community and members of the greater Greensburg community for donating clothing and helping Pitt-Greensburg to make a stellar showing in this activity. ▲

New projects build CFAR credentials

Pitt-Greensburg's Center For Advanced Research (CFAR) marked its first anniversary this past fall, and its list of accomplishments are noteworthy.

Most recently, CFAR was the featured campus organization at the Business and Community Leaders Holiday After Hours, hosted by the Office of University Relations and Institutional Advancement in December 2014. Local community and organization leaders were able to meet and chat with CFAR faculty and students during the informal reception at Lynch Hall.

"It was a great opportunity for faculty and students to speak individually with the judges, commissioners, business and non-profit leaders, and educators to identify any projects on which we may be able to collaborate," said Dean Nelson, PhD, associate professor of Mathematics and director of CFAR.

CFAR also was one of the programs featured during Chancellor Patrick Gallagher's visit to Pitt-Greensburg in October 2014. The Chancellor met with CFAR's faculty and student research assistants to learn how the center reconceives community service, bringing faculty and student expertise to bear on real problems and issues in the community.

"We felt that our students were well able to articulate the nature of their experience with CFAR," noted Nelson.

At this time, six affiliated faculty members and several other faculty members are collaborating on projects. Nine student research assistants gained valuable hands-on experience working on projects in the fall and were trained in using the statistical analysis software SPSS, qualitative analysis software NVivo, and in performing needs assessments.

One of CFAR's first projects, funded in part by the Pennsylvania Commission on Crime and Delinquency, was to provide an "overall examination of the current offender re-entry process in Westmoreland County, with a particular emphasis towards mental health and housing issues . . ." On June 30, 2014, the Center submitted its final report for the project entitled, "An Examination of the Adult Offender Re-entry Process in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania."

Prior to the end of the Spring 2014 semester, CFAR began working with the Blackburn Center Against Domestic and Sexual Violence. A steering committee consisting of CFAR faculty and campus staff will both assess attitudes on sexual violence among Pitt-Greensburg students and create co- and extra-curricular programming aimed at positively impacting those attitudes. A survey administered to all incoming freshmen in Fall 2014 will serve as a baseline measure of their attitudes. Plans are in place to re-survey this cohort when they are seniors to determine the impact of the programming held on campus during their four years here. This pre/post assessment on subsequent entering freshman classes is expected to be repeated.

CFAR worked on other projects and actively maintained relationships this year with both internal and external clients, including the Economic Growth Connection of Westmoreland, the Central Westmoreland County Unity Coalition, Criminal Justice Advisory Board, and United Way of Westmoreland County.

Three grant applications for projects involving economic forecasts, state-wide delivery of domestic and sexual violence prevention services, and a community mural project to ameliorate blight were submitted by the center but were not funded. CFAR is confident that several other development proposals currently underway will be successful. ▲

Aaron Slafka Memorial Scholarship established

Ten years ago, Pitt-Greensburg student Aaron Slafka experienced a life-changing diagnosis of a benign brain tumor after being in a car accident. The surgeries following the diagnosis triggered epilepsy that ultimately contributed to his unexpected death in April 2014.

Aaron Slafka, who graduated in 2008, is remembered for his determination, warmth, upbeat personality, and—ultimately—the inspirational way that he lived his life.

A member of the Pitt-Greensburg cross country team throughout his diagnosis and illness, Slafka showed up for every practice and every meet. When he could not get clearance to run, his coach, Joyce Brobeck, sought to get him clearance to ride a bicycle during the team’s practices. He took on the role of leader and motivator, following along behind the runners shouting out encouragement.

Brobeck, who retired at the end of the fall 2014 season, said her strongest memory is of the Westminster Invitational when she “broke every rule in the book” by telling Slafka to dress and warm-up because he was going to run in his first and only college meet. At the time, Slafka was having problems with one of his legs, causing him to fall while running.

Brobeck notes that each time he fell, he would get back up and keep running. She remembers running ahead to each mile marker to make sure Slafka was making it through the course. At the last mile marker, she sprinted ahead to the finish line and asked the invitational officials if they could keep the timing equipment in place for Slafka to finish. Twenty minutes after the other runners had completed the course, Slafka crossed the finish line with all of the competing college teams cheering him on.

Slafka, a McKeesport native, graduated from Pitt-Greensburg with a degree in political science. President of the Pitt-Greensburg Student Government Association (SGA) and captain of the cross country team, he loved politics but never got to realize his other dream of living and working in Washington, DC. He did get to meet and host Hillary Clinton when she held a rally at Pitt-Greensburg in 2007 as part of her presidential campaign.

Slafka is remembered as an inspiration to all who met him. In 2007, ESPN profiled the student-athlete in a segment of “NCAA on Campus.”

“Aaron cared so much about Pitt-Greensburg and was strongly committed to the school in so many ways,” says Paul Adams, PhD, associate professor of Political Science and chair of the Behavioral Sciences Division. “Whether it was student government, cross country, or an enlightening discussion in class, Aaron was always engaged—even when his illnesses were making it hard for him to do so.”

Recently, friends of Slafka approached Pitt-Greensburg about establishing a scholarship in his memory. The scholarship would be awarded to a junior or senior student majoring or minoring in political science who has demonstrated service to the University and demonstrates perseverance and the ability to overcome adversity.

“After Aaron’s death, his mother, told me how much he loved Pitt and that he wondered whether we had forgotten about him,” says Adams.

“The award is a way to make his presence not only one that we will never forget but a means to encourage and reward students like Aaron who achieve so much in the many different areas of their Pitt-Greensburg experience.”

Adams continued, “The award will go to a student who not only reflects the kind of leadership and engagement that Aaron possessed but who also has overcome adversity, challenges, and travails that make that accomplishment so much more meaningful. It is a way of saying thanks and recognizing the special student-scholar/ leaders who play incredibly important and irreplaceable roles at this university.” ▲

You CAN make a difference

Scholarships are an essential component in recruiting and retaining top quality students. The vast majority of Pitt-Greensburg students receive some type of financial aid, making scholarship revenue our single greatest need. Endowments provide financial support for scholarships, fellowships, faculty chairs, instruction, University programs, facilities, and services.

Scholarships and endowments are created with an initial investment and can be added to over time, by anyone. These funds are named in perpetuity and not only provide student and University support, but also provide the donor an opportunity to interact with the students and faculty members that benefit from their generosity.

For more information about establishing a scholarship or endowment, please contact Jodi Kraisinger, director of University Relations and Institutional Advancement, at 724-836-9942 or gifts2pg@pitt.edu.
